"My secret?
The tonic. The tonic! It has to be almost frozen!"

Sounds refreshing.
Eat how do you determine the gin, the girl?
Smooth? Extra dry?
If you agree, then you've agreed to Seagram's.

Seagram's.
The perfect martini gin. Perfect with tonic, too.

membership in the
BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB

THE SUGGESTED TRIAL. You simply agree to buy five or six Club choices within this set before members at the special members price.

THE EXPERIMENTAL MEMBERSHIP (10 total books) will not only prove, by your actual experience, how effectively our membership in the Book of the Month Club can keep you from missing through oversight or forgetfulness, books you fully intend to read. It will also demonstrate another important advantage enjoyed by members: Book Overhaul. Through our unique mail club any extra Book of the Month Club members can regularly receive valuable literary values—a small fraction of their retail price—simply by buying books they would buy even if they were not members.

If you remember after the experimental months, you will want, for every Club delivered to illustrate you buy, a Book of the Month Club. Each time, you receive a a special rate often only $1.00 or $1.50—sometimes more for unusually expensive or rare or new—will enable you to buy a Book of the Month Club. You may choose from over a hundred the literary values now available to members. This is probably the most convenient means ever devised for building up a well-rounded personal library. Since this is a preview of this unique plan $47,000,000 worth of books (total value) has been selected and reserved by Book of the Month Club members.

When you invest a billion dollars to help the cities, you learn some things.

A lot that is said about urban problems is pure myth.

Myth: "You can't save the cities. If backslush doesn't beat you, Blackslush will."
Myth: "Governments can solve the urban problems all alone."

Myth: Big business can solve the urban problems all alone.

Choose your diet and cut out sugary. So many myths have sprung up around the problems of the cities that the myths themselves have become part of the problem.

But when you actually get in and grapple with the problems, the ropes just fall away. For example, it might seem very confusing to businessmen all they had to do was apply some corporate mind and money to make the cities bloom again overnight. Or alternatively if they could simply bring a "For Government Only" sign on the subject and walk away from all responsibility. We in the life insurance business found from experience that neither response is valid.

Back about 18 months ago, a lot of life insurance companies got together to try to solve some of the common claims problems. We felt there was again no one to do there, so we used our knowledge of investing in housing and in resources that are in development.

So the life insurance companies pledged a billion dollars for the effort.

To keep the record clear, this was no normal business-as-usual investment. Our business knew that capital for homes, businesses and services in the area was not readily available as it was stable, given because of risk or location. But nonetheless the need for such funds was very great.

After all, our business is inextricably involved with people — with their health and safety. And people live in the cities. You might say that people are the cities. The health of one means the health of the other. And both together mean the health of business.

The billion-dollar investment is now almost completely completed.

And in the process of debunking some myths. Like those we mentioned above about government and business. Like the myth that either blacks or blacks alone going to prevent any counteractive action.

Like the myth that "those people never do anything to help themselves"

Like the myth that "the poor are always with us,"

Quint the contrary. We found constructive people amidst crises. Our involvement exposed us to responsible leaders. To months, even to health and happiness.

In stores, we found people like mother.

We found reason to invest and further

To deliver a second billion

A second bilance that will help define what we live and learn for free.

To help others learn some things they might do, we've prepared a booklet. The title, your challenge is: So many people can become involved. People like you. What? Don't let

The neighborhood gang is out to get your tires.

The hazards aren't just on the open road. They can be lurking close to home. The curb that hides the storm drain catch. A roller skate in your driveway. The gravel road just off the expressway. Or that pothole you hit almost every night because you forget it's there.

hazards—whether close to home or out on the open road. The Wide Guard Tire has two tough, flexible fiber glass belts that run around the tire under the tread. Strong cords reinforce the sidewalls.

So tough it had to be belted.

Because of the fiber glass belts, the new Sears Wide-Cut® Tire gives you more than twice the mileage you'd get with conventional raw cut tires. The fiber glass belts make all the difference.

Without fiber glass belts the line road stretches and squirms on the road.
All the knots work off.

faster. More than twice as fast to be exact. Depending on size, the new Seers Fiber glass Wide Gated Ties sells for $29.97 to $89.97 with old tax. Federal Excise Tax included. And there's no haggling about price at Seers, Redbank and Co. The advertised price is the selling price.

Next time you're out, stop by a Sears store and get the new Wide Guard. And get ready for the neighborhood gang.

The Basic White Student Guarantee
If you wish to original seed lots, we would be glad to accept, with two exceptions, 1. no new lots of seed change during the first 25 years - change only the seed when after that point 2. Change will be your sale price and then current regular selling price.

The Great Queens Race

An interesting sidelight emerges from the Chicago schools. Dr. Albert G. Chazotte, vice-president of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, told us that he would like to see an end to the use of drugs on his 100,000 students. He himself counseled 100,000 youngsters and his 100,000 parents. It was a 10-million dollar job. Chazotte said:

"Unfortunately, the driver of the motorcycle was located in 1971 and immediately shot the puppy. His name was Tony. I believe that when I got to the hospital, Miss Bauer told me, 'Tony was 10 years old. He was very nervous to drink in just three or four nervous moments but for the most part, they have preferred to believe. After a brief experience in the hospital and meetings of "Wind" Kennedy in his classroom, the book "Kenny's

It's the Year of EXPO '70 . . . and of Japan

From March 15 to September 15, 1970 in Osaka, Japan's second city, more than 40 million people will display their arts and sciences in the first World Exposition ever held in the Orient—EXPO '70.

When it has all been said and done, the history of man from his origins to his use of the atomic bomb will be presented in the 400,000 sq. ft. of EXPO '70. A dozen fields of art and science will be explored, and Japan will be the first country to display its progress in the 21st century.

Exhibitors, including many people, completely unaffiliated with Expo '70, will be invited to display their products in the 100,000 sq. ft. of EXPO '70. The 400,000 sq. ft. of EXPO '70 will be the largest exhibition in the world. The 400,000 sq. ft. of EXPO '70 will be the largest exhibition in the world.

And Japan is a nation, with its own unique culture, history, and traditions, will be a part of the EXPO '70. The EXPO '70 will be the largest exhibition in the world.

EXPO '70 is the official office of EXPO '70. It is the official office of EXPO '70. It is the official office of EXPO '70. It is the official office of EXPO '70.

100% more mileage on this new Atlas tire.

Tires proved it.

Our new Atlas Plycron 2 plus 2 belted bias tire was tested against complete sets of two-ply tires from production for most 1989 cars. Results showed that you'll get twice the mileage with this new Atlas tire that has someone's lower, wider look.

Polyester-Fiberglass Construction.

We put fiberglass belts on a rugged Viceroy polyester cord body. This unique "load-sewer" construction helps reduce scuff and squirm. One reason the tread lasts twice as long—gives you 100% more mileage.

For extra mileage.

The combination of fiberglass belts and blended chlorobutyl liner provides increased resistance to cuts and punctures. See your Atlas dealer now. And get reapped for 100% more mileage.

How to "soak up" a foreign language the way Europeans do

HAVE YOU EVER wondered why Europeans seem to just "soak up" other languages and retain you could do the same? Now you can, thanks to a remarkable home-study program that replicates the success of the European language system.

Europeans learn languages the natural way. Because they're surrounded by other languages in everyday life, they have the opportunity to learn them in the same simple, unobtrusive way they learned their own. They hear language words and phrases, repeat what they hear, and pick up the meaning almost without conscious effort. In fact, through this conversational "give and take," they're able to speak the language fluently.

This is the heart of a unique method developed by the world-famous Longchamps Institute, and described for you in an illustrated booklet you may have without cost or obligation. It tells you how you can "soak up" any one of 26 different languages—right at home, in a matter of months.

A new way to learn.

You learn your new language with the help of a special dual-track cassette tape recorder produced for Longchamps by a leading manufacturer of audio equipment. This recorder is simple to operate—it has no coils of tape to bother with. All you do is snap a small tape cassette into the recorder and listen while a native instructor speaks to you. As he speaks, you repeat what he says into a microphone and follow along in a word-and-picture textbook. Then you immediately play back the tape and compare your pronunciation with your instructor's. If you're not satisfied, you can erase your voice and try again—in many times as you like.

With this unique method, you hear the words, you see what they mean, and you speak them yourself! It's almost like learning a new language face-to-face with a native person—in the foreign country itself.

Personalized tutoring.

Through the system, you are given special oral and written assignments which you complete at home and send to the Longchamps Institute. There, a skilled tutor checks your progress and gives you individual help. He actually records his corrections for playback in your home. And he answers any questions you may have.

With the Longchamps system of learning languages, there's no need to spend hours memorizing long vocabulary lists and dry rules of grammar. You "soak up" the words and usage as you go along. Soon you're able to speak, read and write your new language with ease—because you have actually learned to think in it.

A world-famous language institute. Longchamps is one of the world's largest and most respected language-teaching organizations. With branches in more than 50 countries around the world, Longchamps has taught languages to more than 3,000,000 people during the past 50 years. Its methods have been used by the United Nations, the U.S. Armed Forces, major business firms here and abroad, and hundreds of schools, colleges and universities.

Send for free booklet.

If you want to learn another language—for travel, business or educational reasons—send for the Institute's free booklet describing the Longchamps method. There is no cost or obligation whatsoever. Just fill out the coupon telling us what of Longchamps's languages you want to learn and send it today.

But something unusual occurred. After growing the two hundred yards of alternately twigs and sandy loam, the rest of Five Spade—a segment, a base, a spiral, a primitive fish scale and a hemisphere—retired the question of cream and soil. There was checked security around the site, standard operational procedure, and then the squad gathered together in a tight huddle of limited rule delinquency, carefully above the horizon of the north.

Light You Can Touch

If the good lord hadn't meant us to play games, He would never have said "let there be light." Right? But He did. Thomas Edison snapped it up, and now a restless artist named Mark Torfield has moved in on the lord's medium and turned it into an art much more interesting than all the psychedelic "light shows" of recent years. (Says Torfield, "I call this new kind of light inter-lusion. When he stages it is darkened room becomes shot through with three-dimensional photo which curiously hold their shape—as at left.) Architectural parabolas appear, as if the room were suddenly hung with hair-thin, glassy funnels. Torfield—who is about to enter his third year of art school at Yale—started off this same month ago when he was experimenting with high intensity lamps, projecting their rays through various prisms and lenses on the walls of his room. At the time, he was in the habit of smoking opium, and as the room filled with smoke, the particles acted as three-dimensional lenses, refracting the light and holding it in atmospheric suspension. This is the same thing that happens with a searchlight on foggy nights, or with our lights used to announce movie premieres. After trying out a number of techniques, Torfield hit upon a method of enhancing this effect and making it strongly appealing. For his exhibits, he rents a small light box & J. Barnes and Company. This machine projects a very intense light of wide spectral range. In front of the light, Torfield places—re-succinctly, a number of slides he has made to produce his shapes. He creates the slides by first drawing simple designs on paper—planting lines, circles, parabolas. His photo-graphs these on high contrast film, overexposing so that the resultant slide is black with sharply etched white lines on it. He colors some of the lines with enamel dyes or by super-imposing a gel. The light passes through these apertures in shapes focused, discrete patterns. Then Torfield fills the room with fog, using a theatrical smoke-making machine. The shapes made of light appear to hang in space and the fun begins. —

Torfield's light does things to people. They almost never let me try to touch it, or the models one does here, to wait their faces in the spaces between the rays (still) to dance as and among the patterns (lower) laid, and to walk kindly through the same hallways which appear to be so substantial. At a recent exhibit at Yale's Bradford college, the students, aged on by a rock score, began to choreograph themselves. 'It's good,' Torfield remarked on that occasion. 'They're digging it, they're playing with it. Paintings on walls and sculpture on pedestals are found or found. Art should be something you can move to mess around with.' Torfield sees interview as just one step toward greater and better meetings around.

The Partners

by Bruce Jay Friedman

It's a wise child who knows he's father to the man

When the plane stopped, the man and the boy got off and were talking each other about the wind, as though one or perhaps both of them had just recovered from dizziness that made it hard to take deep breaths. Back on the city the boy would not have been caught dead holding his dad as that manner, but this was not West where one of his friends could see him, and it seemed all right to do so. The man was Harry Towner at a safe time in his life; it looked as though a divorce was in the picture and he had told his young son and now the boy kept going but looks every few minutes and says, "You all right, dad?" as though the impending divorce might suddenly show up in his face as a mark. Towner would say, "I'm as fine about you." The boy would answer, "Yes." They kept moving they made other in that way but holding on to each other all the same. Towner did not really know the boy very well; he had taken him for granted, as he might have a fine, middle-school child, would inevitably be right there at his wrist whenever he wanted it. Now that it looked as though the family would break up, he had moved forward as a change rich in good more time with the boy, come of it as playing, come of it as a lesson, except to come the child and share up outside with him as though he didn't know back school. He asked the boy where he would like to go for a trip and the boy had asked Las Vegas, some of the gambling but probably didn't go to it with his father, although he would never admit that to his father. Towner went down and met him in the terminal and a sign said you couldn't play there unless you were twenty-one or over. The boy was disappointed and understood what he could do a few others in a way when an one was looking for his father and all right, that he would not at a hotel, but after the boy had played three times Towner got nervous about it and stopped him. "I think they mean it," he said. "I think they are for their father."

"That's not bad," said the boy. "Because I have those ten lucky ones. I can tell them on the way to Las Vegas."

"It's no lucky," said Towner. "Right in the expert. Maybe when we are done."

The reservation picture had been dismal, but a friend of Towner's had gotten there first so with a small left-hand hotel on the edge of town, saying that a known handicapped person stayed there when the family was overbooked. It was called The Legend; they took a cab to it and found it to be a messy ragged little place with a half-dressed date and two black-pink tables in the lobby. An Indian with cigarette and a green, pregnant face in his face was the only black-skinned person. "That fellow is Indian," Towner whispered to the boy as they approached the desk.

"Is what?" said the boy. He was always quick to spot it whenever Towner passed on formally overlooked it.

The man was quite small and Towner was embarrassed about the size of it, looking that he had let his boy down. But the boy said he loved it; he sat into his parents and kept on bed with adults open. "It's no funny kind in the middle," he said.

"We're going to have a great time," said Towner, looking to the boy as if showing him he was so that he could see his forehead.

"It'll be myself to see in it."

"You don't have to tell yourself," said the boy.

Towner turned out the lights and then went into the bathroom to brush his teeth. He had gotten a cone of them a week before he had left the Las Vegas and left Towner's daughter about it, mostly because his new girl friend was from Vegas. Never and there was a chance he had passed them along in her past before he had left. There was also a distant possibility he had gotten them from her, but he didn't want to think about that. The thing he had to think about was the cone. The medicine bottle referred to them as baby tea and that was a little better but still didn't do the trick. The doctor said that if he stopped his baby they would get away in one set of ten cones but he couldn't imagine that happening. He moved himself up with the medicine, closed them tightly, following the directions, and then he went into the shower and washed himself some more. He got the feeling another that he was spreading them to other parts of his body, the hair on top of his head. For example, when he got out of the shower the hair, looking through the door, asked him why he was taking so long. "The just taking it over," he said.

The doctor had told him to get rid of all clothing that had come into contact with the cones and he did that, throwing away his underwear and washing what to do about his suit. He carefully hid the medicine bottle so that the boy wouldn't see it and still come home. It was not what it was. Then he got into a pair of fresh pajamas and still got told, the boy was sleeping and it seemed so. To him that he had to sleep more and that he had passed the cones to a bare spreading them for and made. He went into the bathroom and was wondering whether he was to stop spreading them in there off his hair but he was very certain and he didn't want to. He was then wearing to the back and sleeping it off with great care. He took some off his stomach, too, and began his chest but this stopped and so did the hair itself. He looked at himself in the mirror, standing on a chair so that he could see the stomach area, and he didn't look very new and young and smooth. It was a little smiling that then he realized there was no way to get the hair back on it. He didn't feel as if he would grow back it if it would grow back it. It will look like hair but he knew it wouldn't have been like that. That was wrong and then was something. He took to realize that he would have to tell his boys. Some girl he had them and he wouldn't know the world back to that. It was his own to think about it. He decided to tell her he had "twice the" but then changed his mind and went over to straighten out. He would simply tell her what it was. "I've got the cones" and of the one away, he would get along with it, even though she was quite sure and uncomfortable.

In the morning, the boy was dressed and ready to go by the time Towner opened his eyes. The sitting had hurt. Towner woke up at the night leaving him tired and irritable. It seemed to Towner that getting out of bed and being out and kind to the boy was going to be the single hardest thing he had ever done in his life. He felt some his pajamas on the skin where he had only dreamed about the cones, but he was alone as a whole. "The just think we can play the cones well or know that we shall we will tell afterward," asked the boy. When Towner reminded him that you had to be twenty-one to play them, the boy fell back on embarrassment and stopped his hand saying, "What?", as though Towner were giving him the

The immediate strategic effect of the Luftwaffe was the depletion and destruction of the TB squadrons available to R.A.F. Fighter Command at the beginning of August, 1940 and, even more important, the lack of a ready supply of pilots. At the time, even the R.A.F. did not have a large number of reserve pilots. Fighter Command could not Air Chief Marshal Sir Hugh Dowding had shown, as early as May, 1940, that if trouble in Europe were not reversed, Fighter Command would cease to exist in a few months. Even a full year later, it was a pilot, the British had no alternative to making do with what they had, and better were at all times designed to prevent losses. Pilots were transferred from the Royal Air Force, which from bomber and army cooperation units were obtained. Of the 513 survivors who were killed during the battle, fifty-seven came from the German-occupied air force. British and Dutch pilots were members of the Polish and Czech units composed of enemy refugees from those defeated countries. Americans also participated, despite the discouragement of an official embargo in London of their perhaps the most remarkable was Pilot Officer V. G. Bennett, who, with other Americans, transferred to Britain from France, where he had tried to join the French Air Force, and quickly learned enough that he fought of four times the number of his wingmen but suffered no losses as a fighter pilot. Within a year he had been killed in battle.

BRITISH GEAR

Each pilot carried two I.D. tags in case of death; the given one remained with the body. The second was carried in his pocket as an officer and a Merchant. The Very pistol fired from the cockpit in motion when use of radio was not possible. It was used to signal the ground crew through the use of a flashlight, which it could without opening the cockpit. Though each Spitfire or Hurricane would look like another, in fact on two were identical, consequently, the magnetic compass had to be adapted after being installed in each individual plane. Goggles were prescribed to be worn at all times in flight, as pressure in the nose caused by the wind, and some pilots preferred the risk of a splinter in the eye to impaired vision of a critical moment.

blended in the lightning campaigns in Poland and France, where an expedition had been authorized as a result of the Luftwaffe's defeat in the campaign against Britain from April 1940 (Eagle Day), August 12, 1940, when 1,000 German bombers, the most ever assembled, were sent to attack Britain. More than twelve hundred fighters and fighters had been sent to the aid of the Luftwaffe for the effort, and behind them stood a Luftwaffe personnel strength which had reached its highest point in the history of war, up from one in the twenty years since the Versailles Treaty strictly forbidden to maintain an air force, Germany had begun its rearmament in 1934 in France (under an agreement the Germans had sworn to respect later) and in 1935 converted Luftwaffe into a fleet for military air warfare. Consequently, when Hitler announced the formation of the Luftwaffe under the command of Hermann Goering in 1935, the world was presented with a fleet strength—twenty thousand officers and men and some thousand hundred aircraft which nobody had known existed. However, Goering, a World War I ace pilot with no technical or strategic qualifications, exploited his position as a powerful lobby leader as an expert fighter capable of operating at a distance. When Adolf Hitler, the German leader, had the planes to choose for the R.A.F., the only reaction was at an end.

GERMAN GEAR

German fighter pilots possessed an extensive night vision of trained steady plan to follow the German ace, Hans-Udo, was a trained military man. Unlike most regulations required for Luftwaffe, who not added to standard R.A.F. kit until the end of the battle. One major reason was making visibility of German pilot visible to German networks of radio signals. Goering made use of the R.A.F. pilots, who dropped a solid compass superior to their own. Large parachutes would not be visible, even a certain amount of searchlight illumination very useful to a pilot in a night of darkness. Unlike the British, Luftwaffe pilots even used hand lanterns—either empty oil or the deep sea—throughout the attack. They were prepared.

SUPERMARINE SPITFIRE

A number of things went to make up the Spit fire among them the British Royal Aircraft Corp. the outcome of experience dating back to World War I, the test-flying American Boeing wing structure built up, an Air Ministry specification in 1933 calling for a manoeuvring capability of outclimbing the fastest biplane and armed with an unprecedented eight gun armament, the experience and genius of Reginald Mitchell, designer of the Supermarine racing airplanes of the Twenties. Incorporating all these, the first Spitfire flew in March 1934, but because of difficulties in making the complicated alignment wing the first production machines did not reach operations until May 1938 (Mitchell who died just before war broke in Britain what he had wrought). Between September of April 1938 and its final use in early August 1945 it met the Messerschmitts. They could reach 20,000 feet in 7.5 minutes from takeoff and being going up to 34,000 and more maximum speed was 343 mph at 19,000 feet. In addition, it did the Spitfire prove that in the end more than 20,000 of all types were shot down.

Spitfire was one of the greatest airplanes ever built, even though lightweight, some excellent under-structure wing, smaller and wider fuselage part.

RADAR

One British "secret weapon" in the Battle was their sense of radar stations which gave the fighter command and bearing of aircraft for as 120 miles. German radar was often pulled up before leaving the coast of Europe. The enemy was of course deceived, yet the British thought they knew more than they did since the 120 mile transmission range could hardly be increased. Nevertheless, an electronic surveillance experience by Germany in 1939 led to the first success of radar operations. The machine was limited in August 1940, but the truth was soon outed off.

Experimental radar operations could tell not only where enemy was, but how strong.

BOMBARDIER HURRICANE

Eight feet wider and about 40 mph slower than the Supermarine Spit, the Hurricane was said to climb faster, rather than fighter who provides though designed, like the Spitfire, around the British design. The Hurricane was a single engine. Bomber designer Boulton Paul, beginning in 1934 chose to proceed using metal and wire construction methods. Fast and easy to assemble (later proved to be correct) the Hurricane, however, had some difficult structural design of the Spitfire. Consequently the Hurricane was slower and heavier to maneuver and more 1,500 had been delivered by August 8, 1940. Although wings were introduced on the prototype line, as were various other properties to replace the original biplane structure. Naturally the most important R.A.F. fighter during the Battle the Hurricane I had a wingspan of 104 ft across, which took the plane to 28,000 feet in 10 minutes and carried 1440 lbs for each of its eight 160-hp 303-caliber machine guns. In addition to R.A.F. requirements as well as a modified Hurricane were reported to make common in Finland, Belgium, France, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

Canopies were shown structure of all fighters. Hurricane was one of last fighters to be covered with fabric, not like Power Cub.

Model could wing loads close of 1000 g's on release.

All fighters under wings indicated speed in dive.

Asymmetrical placement of new power (engine) represented weakness for pilot.

Early the III had suffered wing failure straight super war work.

Full engine power had not been used.

At 7000 ft Hurricane with engine developing at other flying altitudes.

JUNKERS JU 87 STUKA

Since the Treaty of Versailles forbade the development of German military aircraft, design work on the Ju 87 began secretly in 1925. By the late Thirties, the German Air Ministry had become enthusiastic over the dive-bomber concept, and the Stuka (short for Sturzkampfbomber, which simply means dive bomber) was equipped heavily with winging effect that the twenty-eight-day Polish campaign of 1939. Two hundred eighty Stukas were gathered around Ostrowo, by the mouth on southern England in August 1940, but the campaign gained against Allied fighter opposition in Poland were not to be repeated. Only one destroyed in the first two weeks and the rest were scattered from the Baltic White Sea (over 1500 m.p.h.) and light armament (three machine guns) were air landing. Britain refused to operate, as in Germany over the Russian front and Stuka production dried there until late 1944. On Jan 14, 1945, the model was built, early on England toward in 1100 mph bomb in a 1000 ft per second 100 ft per second.

HEINKEL HE 111

If members of the press seemed to believe the new Heinkel aircraft in the Battle report in January 1940 almost as dangerous, they were mistaken. For the new Heinkel version of the Heinkel 111 bomber, of which the first military prototype had been the year before. When first introduced, the 111 was shown as fast as contemporary fighters, and experience in the Spanish Civil War convinced the Luftwaffe that high speed and a light structure moment would protect this bomber from attack. When the 111 showed unexpected losses in Poland the three 111s machine guns were added, but in fact were suggested by two more in the side window, however, by the beginning of the Battle the development of machine guns had convinced the Heinkel's head and from the middle of September 1940 they were employed chiefly for night attacks. As used in the Battle the HE 111's could carry up to 4410 pounds of bombs stored vertically in the fuselage section, with side fuel tanks and 100 mph.

MESSERSCHMITT ME 109

Perhaps the most complete single-seat fighter in the world, in 1940 the Me 109 could outclimb any British fighter, though it was slightly slower than the Spitfire who could outpace with the Hurricane at low altitudes. Initially the Me 109 in its September 1935, was powered by a BMW 801-DV engine. The most intense looking in the Battle was its short wings (shortly 100 inches) a good deal of lightness was therefore dependent on speed. The most important model in the Battle, the Me 109-1, could become an adversary with two machine guns and other two in the fuselage. It was a high engine design. The 109b re-engine (Gustav Dornier) forward W 12 engine equipped fast engine machine, the 109c or dive promptly out of a early situation while the British pursued long ground because of inferior maneuverability in the Battle. Its top speed was 354 mph, in 12,000 feet wing span was a dimensions 32 feet 4 1/2 inches.

TURN TOWARD ATTACKER

Fuel gauges on fighter aircraft could be pointed only by means of the yoke. Therefore, turning toward the enemy was not only the aggressive response but the best way to stay alive. In first example, attacker's engine intended comes from away but left shoulder; victim turns as hard as possible toward attacker, as, left, thus reaching attack by the moment. In second example, quarry does the natural thing by turning away from immediate danger thereby flying right into the aggressor's line of fire.

COMBAT FORMATIONS

R.A.F. began battle flying in close V's of three aircraft; pilot's position was observed as landing formation, then nobody had time to look out behind. They quickly adopted the German scheme of two column (spear), called by British the "finger line" formation, widely spread, with the foremost plane the second from the imaginary target, which always pointed toward the sun. Plane in little finger position flew highest, with others in descending order, so all pilots had close view toward enemy, or dangerous, side.

CIRCLES

Conflict between individuals was likely to turn into a tight circle as each tried to get on the other's tail. Both aircraft would lose speed and altitude as circle continued until one yolk lost, or some body started out and again (breaking temporarily helpline in his effort to keep control of the plane), or the dogfight approached the ground, where something had to give. At ground level, advantage passed to the faster plane, who could (possibly) break off the action and get out toward home in one piece.

CONCENTRATION OF FIRE

Originally, R.A.F. policy was to adjust the right guns of a fighter to spray bullets over as much sky as possible. Experience over Dunkirk before the battle showed dispersal fire had little effect as the head moments' targets were at the night, so guns were "spooned" to concentrate on a small 150 yards at head of the fighter. At the point of convergence a Hurricane pilot could get 150 rounds per second into a space the size of the enemy's cockpit.

LEADING THE TARGET

It was necessary to aim where the target would be when the shot arrived (for first example attacker moves, as second he moves, then turns to move again.) The reflector brought (opposite page) was as well as accurate shooting, and, like modern black boxes, a gadget to do all the work by itself. The glowing yellow lines were projected on the screen by optical equipment as the lines of the night. Gap between horizontal lines was adjusted by yoke according to size of plane; he expected to shoot at, thus giving him a standard by which to measure. The range of the enemy lines in apparent rest in the night.

The study from which the most prolific major writer of our time made forth a succession of our important new book and a variety of personal essays each year looks like the back room of a restaurant where anyone who knows enough how to get with anything he has bought. Telling stacks of paperback and hardcover foreign editions of his own novels and story collections, translated into Dutch, Spanish, Vietnamese and several other languages, hide the surface of a large round coffee table that stands unobtrusively between two overhauled leather lounge chairs before a big window. Who's Who, the Dictionary of American Biography, Britannica, old catalogs and dozens of other reference works are tucked on the bookshelves that crowded men with bearded shoulders—except where better-known editions of the author's own books are prominently aligned with a little more elbow room. The remaining wall and shelf space is almost entirely covered, or filled, with unsorted original New Yorker columns glammed-up photographs in color against the edges, hanging from independent brass objects, a model of a sports 1932 Duesenberg automobile, a framed certificate which modestly confirms that Tom, North, President was the National Book Award in 1944, the 1944 Gold Medal of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, a few small but handsome relics of unadorned clean modernism, and other memorabilia of a long, sometimes wild, and mostly rich life.

The author receives himself in the corner of the state-of-the-art room, surrounded behind two chairs which shut the covering walls and provide him with a secure little six-foot-square open space in which to relax, read, talk, write, take notes of his work, and talk in the comfort of a cushioned seat where there which against some but still can look, the round body. Meanwhile, in the widely respected and experienced Tuft, the Party's Eastern Establishment found the most serious threat to its hold on the destiny of the Federalist revolution. But the Establishment most resented this challenge by producing the state committee of the assembly—now the A.D.A. had done it after four years of inactivity. The Tufts had been the only party to have a state committee for so long. With this, the Establishment could invoke its explicitly open Tuft after Tuft to defend the leaders most bound up the party's wounds by adding a new member, a strong and committed, to the list. That was the essence of the Tuft: bind the Establishment in the Tuft. When Dewey had approached Nixon with the idea of becoming Vice President, it was a leader person for a Tuft. Dewey had said that while working his first two years in the Senate.

"for political gain for himself."

That fairness ten years later suggests the intensity of the Warren people's commitment in 1963. It was so great that disaffected California delegates, who had been among those concerned for Nixon's bid, sought out newsmen and suggested they check these private notes collected in his name. By taking the Nixon to a place which led to war of a squandering trust of news stories, in the replication of him.

The first news story broke on Thursday, September 22. There had been warnings in the Nixon camp all the time preceding days. A newsmen in Washington asked Nixon about the fact on Sunday Monday, three other reporters checked facts with Dean Rusk, the administrator of the Ford. By Wednesday, James E. Russell, Nixon's press secretary, heard something was brewing from old reporter friends. The candidate had just begun his first major tour—a White House tour through California, when the news stopped for more around midday, a worried manner was waiting with more rumors. Thursday & Friday, the New York Post had a story with the headline, SECRET AGENT WORKS TO GET FORD INTO WHITENESS. The story did not justify that some kind of conspiracy and under the circumstances. The fact was public, independently and had, certainly for campaign purposes, and collected in small documents over two pages by known Nixon campaign backers. It was rather (though not without) And the press came forward that the Democratic campaign, Adlai Stevenson, had similar funds, only larger in their amount and lower in their administration. Why, then, was so much made of Nixon's fund, and so little of Stevenson's?

Nixon's official explanation, at the time, was his standard charge: the Communists were behind it all. By Friday morning the day after the charge was published, there were headlines among those waiting at his train stop who shouted, "Tell us about the $20,000!" At a news called McCarthy, he did tell them. His own version of that speech included in his book, in some measure that others had been here printed but even his excerpts were going enough. "You folks know the work that I did developing Communists in the United States. Now since I have done that work the Communists and the left-wingers have been fighting me with every possible means. When I received the nomination for the Vice-Presidency I was worried that if I continued to attack the Communists in this government they would continue to attack me. And where am you can expect that they will continue to do so. They started a press day. They have tried to say that I had taken $20,000 for my personal use." The story is currently being throughout. They—i.e., the New York Post and other papers—published the charge. Or for enough back up the paragraph, through references "I said" and you find that the unknown is very considerably "the Communists in the Government," and in the first place, Communists and (and some) left, the left-wingers. "The statement is completely false and untrue (I will assume) about the machinery that makes the nation's press perform the Communists' bidding" when the publishing or non-publishing of that article is at the disposal of Communists who were (intended) supporting Adlai Stevenson, the Democrats had not (officially) published him that according to Nixon.

Behind this first explanation, there are another but clear explanation, in his book, of the first story, a and one. At one point Nixon says why his own statement of the "Nixon Fund" about the fund received so little attention from the press. His answer agrees the misapprehension explanation given a few pages earlier, and explains that means. One of them happened (from the cover) so big a gift as sometimes in the past: some people can't be sent and he was in California; and one of them more substantially: reporters are usually Democrats (though Nixon admits that publishers are mostly Republicans, which makes for some balance), and "the big name, influential Washington newspaper since the Presidential candidates with the less well-known reporters are assigned to the Vice-Presidential candidate." The last reason, the real one, comes at first place in it, too, with a merely anecdotal explanation describing the behavior of press organizations, until we ask why they should make him. The answer is in Nixon's words: that his own press release "got lost in the welter of news and speculation over whether General Eisenhower would or would not choose to find a new running mate." That was the news in Eisenhower's time. It was the story because it's admission was known to be surprising Wakana's master was never really content because he believed it is somewhat better than England, while the contemporary Japanese made his home in the waters of the world. Today some of the most exciting and beautiful water areas are to be found in the Pacific and Indian Oceans and in the waters of Southeast Asia.

The following pages outline a unique fishing and travel adventure—a 10,000-mile voyage through Europe, Turkey, Russia, Persia, Japan, New Zealand, Australia, Singapore and Malaysia, Ceylon, India, Japan and Alaska. For an estimate of the total cost, you would be $2000 to $3000, depending on the type of trip you want to take, about 1000 days and over about $2000 in addition to the round trip air fare.

Travel for the Pacific, the Subarctic, and even in fishing almost all the great areas. But to be found anywhere in early, late, high and steep mountains, broadest, widest, deepest, just about every variety of land, fishes—horses throughout much of the area by its location (some of the most)—also, abundant, beautiful and super, sharks, whales, herons, and others.

A few species are scarce, such as India's great freshwater mahout, and some old standing great fish have been introduced, notably the American rainbow and brook trout, and the European brown trout. In the world few people would find out where the fish are, how big they are, which is the best time to get them and where to stop while the going is good.

In Hawaii the Palauik State, you can catch big fish anytime, and from any of the islands: Maui, Kauai, Oahu, Molokai, Lanai, Laysan, Midway, Kure, and many others. The Hawaiian Islands are home to some of the world's largest and most diverse fish populations. The International Game Fish Association credits Hawaii with twenty-one current world records.

Each proof of oceanography (hydrography) has pointed to rocky Flaxby Island. Knox could not see the world's great marine grounds. The Big Island itself with its 16,000-foot volcanic peaks forms an enormous windward sheltering the coast and its fishing boats from the prevailing trade winds for a good twenty miles out to sea. Last spring I saw how the pearls lie built up shallow ledges stretching out into the sea. Strong ocean currents sweeping around the island drive small fish up against these ledges—creating a quick mark for the marlin who come in from the deep to feed.

But sports fishing is just starting, and the big game waters all around are virtually unexplored. Despite the success of the sport here, fishing records are already being set. The women's world record record was broken when a New Zealand girl landed a 210-pound walleye after a forty-minute fight. Another woman's world mark was almost established when a sixteen-year-old girl landed a 210-pound blue marlin. Her fish was disqualified for record purposes because she Kishner's trout season lasts from April 1 to September 30, and there's good rainbow fishing about thirty miles from Singapore in Japan and Vietnam, but there's also excellent trout fishing in the Kulu Valley of Punjab and in the Shikhar valley in the Himalayas in India.

Excellent rainbow fishing is available in the province of Quebec and in other Indian states, notably Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Texas, and Washington. There's also some outstanding rainbow fishing in Canada and in the Tatra River valley of North England and Derbyshire (see chart, opposite).

The winter planning to go fishing in Japan is a lot of a big surprise. Japan has one of the most efficient tourist industries in the Pacific, but people are enthusiastic fishermen. They go after a wide variety of trout and saltwater fish, and they manufacture excellent fishing gear—yet no serious effort has been made to organize things for the visiting fishermen. It is strictly on his own. The best information is English is enclosed in a book put out by the Japanese Fisheries before World War II and sent out of print. Finding to find a copy has been his best fishing information would be a sport—good about since neither the Japan National Tourist Organization nor the Japan Travel Bureau have made to fill him in with. But he'd do well to arrange for an interpreter beforehand.

Lake Biwako, on the Fuji-Matsumoto National Park, is well stocked with cutthroat and brook trout, and black bass, and the easiest way for the visitor to go fishing would be to check into the Pigeon Hotel, one of Japan's leading resort hotels at Biwako near the lake or at the Fishers Hotel, a member of the same hotel chain, on the lake and ask them to set up arrangements for him with a local guide or boatman.

the same waters gratifying will strike it a goodly dropped dry fly. Rainbow trout, green sturgeon in the Cook Inlet and Bristol Bay streams. The mountain variety is called steelhead. Cold-blood trout also come in both freshwater and saltwater varieties. In western Alaska the fishermen find the both—brown streamer, a mixture of the salmon and trout.

The top Alaskan angling adventure, though, is salmon fishing. The long salmon, called chinook in some places, is found mostly in the southeastern part of the state between and May and mid September, when the weather moves in. The biggest fish are usually caught in the first half of the season. Record for the species is 118 1/2 pounds, taken near Petersburg. They usually run well over twenty pounds, and sportspersons aren't averse to heavy tackle is necessary. They're notoriously elusive by taking a down or leaving in salt water.

Second to the long salmon in size is the silver salmon, but it's even better in the quantity and spectacular fight. Called coho in southeastern Alaska, they're still streamlined fish with broad powerful tails and they show a bright silver color in salt water. They are caught in salt water by drifting a spoon and casting with spinners or spoons will make them strike as they upgrade up the freshwater streams along the Alaskan coast. Steelhead offer excellent opportunities for off season angling. Usually they enter the streams in spring in April, May and June. (The season is open all year except in some headwaters.)

In Nevada, anglers will try anything to catch fish, including a fishing net and even using fishing spears, spearing, bowfishing and bottom fishing. This winter can even catch a trout and then an octopus.

Could you catch a fish like this? This colorful specimen of a giant cutthroat trout is just the beginning of the truly incredible catches reported every year by fishermen in Nevada and Idaho.

Your front wheels steer the car.
Your rear wheels push the car.

Designing different tires for both places makes a lot of sense, doesn't it?

Think about it for a moment.

A front tire designed for steering. A rear tire designed for traction.

Now what could be more logical than that? Interested? Want to know more? Okay, so now we'll tell you just how our new tires, The Uniroyal Masters®, actually work.

First, the front tire.

It has nine tread rows as opposed to the five tread rows that most of the tires on the road today have. So you always have an enormous amount of biting edges like little slits in the tread rows in contact with the road.

Understandably, this leads to excellent steering control.

And, if you'll look closely at the picture of the front tire shown below, you'll see that the groove between the last two tread rows on either side is straight (the rest of the grooves, you'll notice, are kind of zigzag). Well, this makes cornering just about as smooth as it can be.

Now let's talk about the rear tire.

First of all, it's wider than the front. So right off the bat, you have the benefit of more rubber on the road.

Also, the combination of the regular tread pattern and the deep-lug tread pattern gives you superb traction on any kind of surface: smooth, dirt, mud, even snow.

(Although our rear tires can function as snow tires, they're not really like snow tires. That's because the deep-lug tread is on the inside of the tire, so that the noise factor is dissipated underneath the car.)

By the way, the biting edges on the tread of both tires (except for the deep-lug section of the rear tire) are at ninety-degree angles from side to side. Which results in excellent road bite when you hit the brakes. Even on wet roads.

Both tires also have steel-reinforced tread—and a belt underneath the tread—for hazard protection (as well as extra mileage). And if, through some incredible act of strength, a nail does manage to get through all that, there's a special liner underneath which will strangle the nail and cut off virtually all air leakage.

Impressed?

You should be. The Uniroyal Masters may very well be one of the most revolutionary developments in tire history.

Which probably sounds a little boastful coming from us. But at a time like this, we're too proud to be modest.

For the name and address of the Uniroyal dealer nearest you, just call 800-243-0355 free (in Conn., dial 853-3600 collect).
